

Polish...Smolish... Does Car Polish Really Do Anything?

Using car polish on your car may seem like a waste of time and money, but it is actually quite beneficial to your car in the long run. The body of your car will last much longer because it will not rust, you will not spend money on paint jobs, and your car will bring more money as a trade in if you use car polish at least once every three to four months. I like to do it periodically because I know that it will bring benefits in the long run. I use Valentines Day, Memorial Day, and Labor Day as my car polishing days.

On a bit of a side note, washing your car regularly is also very important. Actually, car washing is just as important as waxing, especially if you live in an area where the roads are treated with salt in the winter. I have added car washing to my weekly routine. I save up quarters in the car that I get as change and use them to run through the car wash. It does not cost much and only takes about five minutes per week, but it will add so much life onto the car. Lets get back on task to car polishing, though.

Car polish application is actually a simple process. Make sure that your car is clean and dry before you begin applying any car polish. Once you have washed and dried the car, begin applying the car polish one section at a time. It is best to test an inconspicuous area of the car first whenever you use a new type of car polish, just to make sure it will not have any adverse reaction. I usually start applying the car polish at the top of the car and working downward because there is usually more dirt at the bottom of the car. I make the bottom of the car the final section because I do not want to scratch up my paint.

Once you are done applying your car polish, rub the car off with a soft cloth to make it nice and shiny. Applying car polish may seem like an odious task, however, it will save you quite a bit of money in the long run. It will add years of life to your car and add dollar signs if you ever sell or trade in your vehicle. By simply applying a little car polish, you can keep your car looking just as good as the day that you drove it off the lot. Applying car polish is definitely worth the work...work a little now, and have your car last a lot longer and be worth a lot more money!
